

Suicide Prevention Capacity Building Program

Build collective capacity to facilitate effective suicide prevention initiatives tailored to your community's needs.

'An opportunity to invite 20 of your key suicide prevention stakeholders to participate in 6 interactive workshops, delivered by Black Dog's clinical psychologists and supported by the Black Dog Suicide Prevention team.'

Black Dog Institute's Suicide Prevention Capacity Building Program provides expert research, evidence, and implementation support to communities across Australia.

The focus of the program is on building your region's capacity to develop appropriate interventions and strengthen the communication, coordination, and visibility of current suicide prevention work through the delivery of 6 evidence-based workshops.

Key features

- 6 interactive workshops.

Delivered online and in-person, the modules cover a range of topics central to suicide prevention, including systems approaches, governance and collaboration, data, lived experience, priority populations and evaluation.

- Locally tailored.

Black Dog Institute understands the unique challenges faced by metropolitan, regional and rural areas, which are addressed in the program delivery, discussion, and activities.

The focus and membership of the participating working group will be guided by your region's needs, current strategic plan, and approach to suicide prevention.

- Suicide Prevention Collaboration

The overarching goal of the program is to build participants' skills in collaboration and coordination, in order to establish and sustain a local suicide prevention collaborative, to collectively reduce suicide deaths and attempts.
